The Christmas Luncheon

Employee 1 came up to Employee 2’s cubicle and leaned over the LEFT side of it, just like they did every morning. Employee 1 didn’t really like it when Employee 2 did that, since they always leaned RIGHT in front of the coffee maker, too, which was just to the LEFT of the printer. With Employee 1 blocking both the printer to the RIGHT and the coffee maker to the LEFT, Employee 2 couldn’t get anything done, and RIGHT fully so.

“You know I can’t get any work done with you leaning RIGHT in front of the coffee like that,” Employee 1, Employee 2 would always say. "I can’t do any of my work RIGHT without my morning joe.”

“Oh, RIGHT,” said Employee 1, standing RIGHT back up. “I was just stopping by to see if you want to join my department at lunch today for our annual Christmas Shindig. It’s going to be at Restaurant RIGHT down the road. They have the best Food.”

“Oh sure,” said Employee 2. “That’s RIGHT kind of you.” Employee 2 was down RIGHT ecstatic about this invitation; they usually didn’t get invited anywhere. They were usually LEFT out of all the fun stuff, since they worked at the last desk to the LEFT at the very end of the room, RIGHT next to the printer. It was a pretty dull existence.

“Do I need to bring anything? I’m afraid I LEFT my wallet at home today.” “Oh, don’t worry about it,” said Employee 1. “We’re RIGHT about to meet our rewards program goal, there’s only a little bit LEFT to go, so lunch should be on the house today.”

right at noon, __________ left and headed right down the street to meet for Christmas lunch with __________ and their department. Because they'd left their driver's license in their wallet at home, they had to walk. Halfway down the street __________ tripped over their two left feet and had to be transported right down the road to the local emergency room.

__________ called __________ and informed them that they wouldn't make it to the Christmas luncheon after all. “I broke both my left feet and will be out for quite a while.” “That's all right,” __________ reassured them. “No big deal. I'll bring you the leftovers.”
